Railroad History:

Logo History: Grand Trunk Railway System

Ties to our history:

Under new general manager Charles Melville Hays, the Grand Trunk Railway adopted a more aggressive management style in 1896 — and a new logo to express the change.

Hays set about modernizing, energizing and expanding the rather stodgy British-owned railroad. Riding on a spirit of optimism, Hays renamed the venerable railroad "Grand Trunk Railway System" to reflect its far-flung interests and ambitions.

Logo train of thought:

The new logo featured a so-called "tilted wafer": the company name on a square tilted nine degrees downward to the left, presumable an eye-catching device to convey motion. However, The logo's simple lines didn't please everyone. One observer thought it was "the most prosaic" of the major Canadian railroad logos.
